

This building was erected in 1903 to house the office of the colonial sugar refining company (now Chelsea). In 1961, it became the site of the Wharf Police station and remained so until 1993.

This building has been appreciatively restored, each room steeped with its own personality. To the naked eye, on approach, the building looks just as it would have done to many who graced its halls and rooms over the years.

As such, the 'Police Wharf Building' now carries the prestigious 'Category 1' title under the Historical Places Act.

Whether you enjoy its warmth as a local, envisage the Colonial Sugar Refining head offices, imagine the Police constable standing pride of place at the front desk or find amusement in the guilty man in shackles-you're sitting in History!
